Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an autofocus apparatus that displays the acquired image data on a monitor. 2. Description of the Related Art When a person is photographed in a state of close-up, the autofocus apparatus automatically adjusts the focus of the image sensing optical system to bring the image sensing optical system to a focusing point. However, the autofocus is sometimes affected by noise that cannot be adjusted. For example, the autofocus apparatus controls the zoom focus by detecting whether or not a brightness difference, i.e., a distance to the object, in a distance direction is larger than a predetermined value. Noise can be a factor of changing the brightness difference. When, for example, an image is displayed on a monitor, for example, on an LCD monitor, an image obtained by the image sensing optical system is displayed in the display area of the LCD monitor. However, the noise that cannot be adjusted is not displayed on the monitor. Therefore, when the noise is superimposed on the image displayed on the monitor, it becomes difficult to check the current state of the focusing control. Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 11-298414 discloses a technique for displaying, on an LCD monitor, the image obtained by the image sensing optical system in a position as close as possible to the focusing point of the image sensing optical system. According to the technique, it is possible to check the current state of the autofocus. However, according ca3bfb1094
