To evaluate the competing risk of rehospitalization for fracture non-union, symptomatic malunion, non-union, or malunion. A retrospective cohort study of all patients admitted for treatment of a long bone fracture between 2003 and 2012. We included 315 fractures: 31 for non-union, 76 for malunion, 149 for symptomatic malunion, and 87 for non-union. A total of 290 fractures had been united at the time of discharge. The total number of admissions during this period was 1082. Patients treated for non-union or malunion had a higher risk of rehospitalization than those treated for symptomatic malunion (adjusted odds ratio [AOR] = 4.8, p
